Read the passage below and answer the following question.

Cambridge University is considering allowing students to use laptops or tablets during exams after teachers complained that students' handwriting is becoming difficult to read.

Sarah Pearsall, a senior lecturer at Cambridge's history faculty said it is "extraordinarily commendable" that the University is considering reforms to its examination practises.

However, others criticised the move. Tracey Trussell, a handwriting expert at the British Institute of Graphologists, urged Cambridge to "make sure that students continue to write by hand, particularly in lectures".
