

Two 12th graders organized the 1st Global Café of this year. The theme was 'Fashion Revolution Week @TGUISS.'

<Comments by organizers(students)>

Fashion Revolution Week is an international campaign which enables us to understand the background of fashion product and its manufacture. It started after Rana Plaza Building Collapse in Bangladesh on April 24, 2013. This building was occupied by many major fashion companies from Europe, and people questioned its safety administration. The purpose of this café was to understand the social problem in the fashion industry and to rethink what we should do and what we can do about it. We, as TGUISS students as well as customers, suggested the new way of enjoying fashion that is producer-conscious and eco-conscious.

<Notes from supervisors(teachers)>

There were 7th to 9th graders who took part in the café for the first time, and the program was enjoyable for them too. Some participants, looking back themselves, said, 'We were wondering why we could buy such cheap clothes, but we took advantage of buying cheap and we ignored people who were actually sewing them.'
