Read the passage below and answer the following question.

According to a recent poll, the majority of children would be happy to see competitiveness removed from school sport. Almost two thirds (64%) of eight to 16-year-olds polled said they would be "relieved, not bothered or happier" if winning or losing were not a factor.

Although 84% of children believed experiencing winning and losing was important, the survey revealed that many would rather play sport for fun, or would be relieved if less was at stake.

"It is worrying to see that so many children would be relieved to see competition removed from sport," said the chief executive of the organisation that conducted the poll. "We want to teach children the importance of playing sport competitively and fairly and for them to see the benefits that it can bring to their lives."

The survey also found that 89.3% of parents of eight to 16-year-olds believed it was "important" or "very important" for their children to taste victory or defeat in sport.
