Read the passage below and answer the following question.

A ban on fast food for children is among the suggestions made by a Dutch scientific institute to boost a healthy lifestyle.

‘Unhealthy food is so widely available that people are becoming ill unnecessarily,’ the institute said in a new report.

Obesity (being extremely overweight), diabetes, heart and lung disease and cancer are among the illnesses which can be caused by an unhealthy diet, and children are becoming used to eating unhealthy food at a young age, the report said.

The report suggests making unhealthy food more expensive and less available, and banning advertisements for unhealthy food, while making healthy food more available.

It also wants better education for children, the introduction of school lunches at a primary school level, and suggests ‘consider introducing a minimum age for fast food, similar to that introduced for alcohol and tobacco’.
